PREFACE

Over the past year, the Biden administration continued to demonstrate its prioritisation of white-collar prosecutions. This includes changes in policy and guidance, such as a renewed focus on individual accountability and voluntary self-disclosure. The administration has continued to redistribute existing resources to prosecutions of corporate crime and, for the second year in a row, announced its intentions to hire more white-collar prosecutors. Given the administration's stated focus on its corporate enforcement priorities, US and non-US corporations alike will continue to face increasing scrutiny by US authorities.

The trend towards more enforcement and harsher penalties has by no means been limited to the United States; while the US government continues to lead the movement to globalise the prosecution of corporations, a number of non-US authorities appear determined to adopt the US model. Parallel corporate investigations in several countries increasingly compound the problems for companies, as conflicting statutes, regulations, and rules of procedure and evidence make the path to compliance a treacherous one. What is more, government authorities forge their own prosecutorial alliances and share evidence or, conversely, have their own rivalries and block the export of evidence, further complicating a company's defence. These trends show no sign of abating.

As a result, corporate counsel around the world are increasingly called upon to advise their clients on the implications of criminal and regulatory investigations outside their own jurisdictions. This can be a daunting task, as the practice of criminal law – particularly corporate criminal law – is notorious for following unwritten rules and practices that cannot be gleaned from a simple review of a country's criminal code. Of course, nothing can replace the considered advice of an expert local practitioner, but a comprehensive review of corporate investigative practices around the world will find a wide and grateful readership.

The authors who have contributed to this volume are acknowledged experts in the field of corporate investigations and leaders of the Bars of their respective countries. We have attempted to distil their wisdom, experience and insight around the most common questions and concerns that corporate counsel face in guiding their clients through criminal or regulatory investigations. Under what circumstances can the corporate entity itself be charged with a crime? What are the possible penalties? Under what circumstances should a corporation voluntarily self-report potential misconduct on the part of its employees? Is it a realistic option for a corporation to defend itself at trial against a government agency? And how does a corporation manage the delicate interactions with employees whose conduct is at issue? The International Investigations Review answers these questions and many more, and will serve as an indispensable guide when your clients face criminal or regulatory scrutiny in a country other than your own. And while it will not qualify you to practise criminal law in a foreign country, it will highlight the major issues and critical characteristics of a given country's legal system and will serve as an invaluable aid in engaging, advising and directing local counsel in that jurisdiction. We are proud that, in its 13th edition, this publication features three overviews and covers 14 jurisdictions.

This volume is the product of exceptional collaboration. I wish to commend and thank our publisher and all the contributors for their extraordinary gifts of time and thought. The subject matter is broad, and the issues raised are deep, and a concise synthesis of a country's legal framework and practice was challenging in each case.

I INTRODUCTION

Regulatory authorities empowered to investigate and prosecute corporates include the following:

- a* the Accounting and Corporate Regulatory Authority (ACRA), which regulates business registration, financial reporting, public accountants and corporate service providers.² ACRA officers have the power to examine any persons reasonably believed to be acquainted with the facts or circumstances of a case and to require any person to furnish information or documents.³ Errant corporates and directors may be offered composition fines in lieu of prosecution and if this offer is not accepted, may be prosecuted in court;⁴
- b* the Singapore Police Force, which has broad investigative powers under the Criminal Procedure Code 2010 (CPC),⁵ including to enter premises without a warrant, require the attendance of a witness, record statements and conduct searches to retrieve evidence. Within the police force, the specialised Commercial Affairs Department (CAD) investigates commercial and financial crimes;⁶
- c* the Corrupt Practices Investigation Bureau (CPIB), which investigates corruption offences across both public and private sectors.⁷ CPIB officers are empowered⁸ to arrest, conduct a premises search and seize evidence without warrant if there is credible information or reasonable suspicion that a corruption offence has been committed;
- d* the Monetary Authority of Singapore (MAS), the central bank of Singapore. MAS regulates and supervises financial institutions (FIs) through, among others, the Securities and Futures Act 2001 (SFA), the Financial Advisers Act 2001 (FAA) and the Singapore Code on Take-overs and Mergers, and enforces the civil penalty regime for market misconduct. MAS officers may require a person to render reasonable assistance in or appear for investigation,⁹ or require any person to provide information or produce

SGX carries out its regulatory functions via an independent subsidiary, Singapore Exchange Regulation Pte Ltd (SGX RegCo). Following investigations, the Attorney-General's Chambers (AGC), which has oversight of all prosecutions, may prosecute potential offenders in court.

Corporates under investigation should always cooperate with the authorities. Various statutes contain provisions penalising a lack of cooperation. For instance, Chapters X and XI of the Penal Code (PC) penalise the giving of false evidence²⁴ and the destruction of documents.²⁵

II CONDUCT

i Self-reporting

Singapore's legislative and regulatory framework adopts a disclosure-based regime.

Rule 703 of the Listing Manual (LM) obliges companies listed on the Singapore Exchange to make timely disclosure of any information a listed entity has concerning itself, its subsidiaries or associated companies that is either 'necessary to avoid the establishment of a false market in [its] securities' or that 'would be likely to materially affect the price or value of its securities'. Non-compliance is an offence if intentional or reckless.²⁶ Directors can be prosecuted in their personal capacity if it is proven that the non-compliance was committed with their 'consent or connivance' or is attributable to their neglect.²⁷

Complementing the LM is the revised Code of Corporate Governance (the Code), issued by MAS and applicable to listed companies. Central to the Code is the 'comply or explain' concept.²⁸ Thus, while variations to the Code are permitted, companies must 'explicitly state and explain'²⁹ how their varied practices are 'consistent with the aim and philosophy' of the principles set out in the Code.³⁰

Separately, FIs and payment service providers under mandatory notices issued by MAS must also self-report. FIs are required to report to MAS misconduct committed by their representatives.³¹ FIs are also required to undertake internal investigations into 31 MAS Notice SFA04-N11, Reporting of Misconduct of Representatives by Holders of Capital Markets Service Licence and Exempt Financial Institutions; MAS Notice FAA-N14, Reporting of Misconduct of Representatives by Financial Advisers (Notice FAA-N14). On 19 April 2022, MAS issued a Consultation Paper on Revised Notices on Misconduct Reporting Requirements under the FAA, Insurance Act 1966 and SFA, with proposed amendments to these notices. This follows on from its Response to Feedback from Public Consultation on Revisions to Misconduct Reporting Requirements and Proposals to Mandate Reference Checks for Representatives that was issued in May 2021.

their representatives' conduct and to submit an annual nil return where there has been no instance of reportable misconduct during the financial year. Failure to comply attracts criminal penalties.³²

More broadly, self-reporting is also generally required to counter money laundering and terrorist financing.³³

In respect of competition law matters, CCCS has a leniency programme that offers different levels of benefits to businesses, depending on whether they are the first to come forward with information about cartel activity or whether investigations have already commenced when they come forward.³⁴

Where a business is the first to provide evidence of cartel activity and does so before CCCS has commenced an investigation, it can be entitled to immunity from financial penalties, provided the business satisfies certain stipulated conditions.³⁵

If a business is the first to come forward seeking leniency and satisfies all the conditions but does so only after CCCS has started an investigation, it would not qualify for immunity. However, it may still qualify for a reduction of up to 100 per cent of the financial penalties.³⁶

If a business is not the first to come forward, or if it initiated the cartel activity or coerced another party to join the cartel's activity, that business may still be granted a reduction of up to 50 per cent of the financial penalties if it comes forward before CCCS issues a notice of a proposed infringement decision under the Competition Act 2004. However, the business will still need to comply with the other stipulated conditions.³⁷

CCCS also operates a 'leniency plus' programme. This incentivises businesses that cooperate with CCCS in a cartel investigation in one market to inform it of their participation in a separate cartel in another market. Businesses that qualify for this may be granted leniency in respect of the second market and also receive a reduction in the financial penalties in the first market.³⁸

33 See Section 45(1) of the Corruption, Drug Trafficking and Other Serious Crimes (Confiscation of Benefits) Act) 1992 (CDSA). Under Section 45(3) of the CDSA, failure to comply with the CDSA attracts criminal penalties.

35 CCCS Guidelines on Cartel Activity 2016 at [2.2]; the conditions are: (1) the business must provide CCCS with all the information, documents and evidence available to it regarding the cartel activity; (2) the business must maintain continuous and complete cooperation throughout the investigation and until the conclusion of any action by CCCS arising as a result of the investigation; (3) the business must refrain from further participation in the cartel activity from the time it discloses the cartel to CCCS (except as may be directed by CCCS); (4) the business must unconditionally admit to the conduct for which leniency is sought; and (5) the business must grant an appropriate waiver of confidentiality to CCCS in respect of any foreign country where the business may have also applied for leniency or in respect of any regulatory authority the business may have informed of the cartel activity.

For offences where a deferred prosecution agreement (DPA) is available,³⁹ self-reporting may be a factor considered in the prosecution's decisions on whether to enter into a DPA and on the conditions or any penalty imposed therein.

ii Internal investigations

A business can conduct its own internal investigations.

Internal investigations typically involve conducting interviews with relevant persons and the review of evidence.⁴⁰ External third parties such as lawyers, accountants, forensic investigators and computer experts often assist in the investigations.

Depending on the seriousness and nature of the matter, individuals being interviewed or whose conduct is being investigated may choose to engage their own lawyers.

From the company's perspective, if there are reasonable grounds to suspect that an internal investigation may lead to legal proceedings, it would be prudent to retain lawyers at the earliest stage. This allows the investigation to be conducted with the benefit of legal advice and assists the company in asserting privilege over matters relating to the investigation.

A key issue that often arises is the extent to which legal professional privilege can be maintained during internal investigations. This was considered in the case of *Skandinaviska Enskilda Banken AB (Publ), Singapore Branch v. Asia Pacific Breweries (Singapore) Pte Ltd and other appeals*⁴¹ (Skandinaviska).

In Skandinaviska, a company, Asia Pacific Breweries (Singapore) (APBS), constituted a special committee comprising external auditors and lawyers to investigate and review its internal controls after a fraud perpetrated by its finance manager. Although draft reports were prepared by the external auditors, a final report was never issued. The Court of Appeal considered whether the draft reports submitted by the auditors to APBS were protected by legal professional privilege.

Legal advice privilege

The Court of Appeal accepted that communications to and from a third party were not protected by legal advice privilege and the auditors would not be regarded as agents of communication for the purposes of legal advice privilege.

That said, the Court of Appeal endorsed the broader approach laid down by the Australian Federal Court in *Pratt Holdings Pty Ltd v. Commissioner of Taxation*⁴² (Pratt Holdings), which focused on the nature of the function the third party performed, rather than the nature of the third party's legal relationship with the party that engaged it, whether the communication in question had been made for the dominant purpose of obtaining legal advice.

The Court of Appeal did not have to decide whether the draft auditors' report was subject to legal advice privilege as the issue was not argued by APBS's counsel.

39 See Sixth Schedule of the CPC; these offences include corruption, money laundering and certain types of market misconduct under the SFA.

40 Such as hard copy documents or forensic analysis of information stored in computers.

41 [2007] 2 SLR(R) 367.

42 [2004] 136 FCR 357.

In the recent English Court of Appeal decision of Regina (Jet2.com Ltd) v. Civil Aviation Authority (Law Society Intervening) (Jet2),⁴³ the English Court of Appeal confirmed that the ‘dominant purpose’ test applied to legal advice privilege, which is in line with the broad view as advanced in Pratt Holdings. While the position appears to be settled in the United Kingdom following Jet2, it remains to be seen whether the Singapore courts would choose to adopt a similar approach in subsequent cases. That said, bearing in mind that the Court of Appeal in Skandinaviska strongly endorsed the broad approach in Pratt Holdings,⁴⁴ it is likely that our courts will focus on the nature of the function the third party performed, rather than the nature of the legal relationship between the parties.⁴⁵

Litigation privilege

In Skandinaviska, the Court of Appeal found that the dominant purpose of the draft reports at the time they were created was in aid of litigation. This was influenced by the fact that external auditors and a legal adviser had been appointed to discover and quantify the financial impact of the fraud and to determine APBS’s potential liability. As litigation was imminent and ‘foremost in the mind’ of APBS, these communications were protected by litigation privilege.⁴⁶

In-house counsel

Under the Evidence Act 1893, legal advice privilege extends to communications with in-house counsel made for the dominant purpose of seeking legal advice.⁴⁷

Waiver and limited waivers

Various statutes recognise that the powers to compel disclosure of documents and information to an investigating body do not extend to communications protected by legal professional privilege. The Singapore High Court has also held that statutes will not be regarded as revoking legal advice privilege unless that is expressly provided for or abrogated by necessary implication.⁴⁸

Where internal investigation reports are submitted to regulators, it is important to take steps to maintain and not inadvertently waive privilege at any stage⁴⁹ and to consider whether the report can be submitted to regulators on a ‘limited waiver of privilege’ basis and, if so, what the scope of this waiver should be.

49 Steps to avoid this include ensuring that strict communication protocols are implemented at the commencement of any investigation, and to clearly spell out the purpose of the investigation in the mandate letters executed in favour of all those engaged in the investigation.

iii Whistle-blowers

At present, there is no overarching legislation in Singapore protecting whistle-blowers.

However, different pieces of legislation contain provisions affording some protection. For instance, the Prevention of Corruption Act 1960 (PCA)⁵⁰ and the Corruption, Drug Trafficking and Other Serious Crimes (Confiscation of Benefits) Act 1992 (CDSA)⁵¹ afford anonymity to whistle-blowers. Similarly, the identity of whistle-blowers on workplace safety hazards is also protected by statute.⁵² In the implementation of CCCS's leniency programme, CCCS will keep the identity of whistle-blowers confidential.⁵³ Under the Companies Act, auditors are protected from defamation suits and liability when reporting fraud in good faith.⁵⁴ The Terrorism (Suppression of Financing) Act 2002 (TSOFA) also protects the identity of whistle-blowers.⁵⁵

It is rare for whistle-blowers to be rewarded by means of legislative provision. Two examples are found in competition matters,⁵⁶ and on information relating to tax evasion.⁵⁷

The Code requires listed companies to publicly disclose and clearly communicate to employees the existence of any whistle-blowing policy and the procedures for raising concerns of this nature.⁵⁸

SGX RegCo mandates that issuers establish and maintain a whistle-blowing policy, which must keep the identity of the whistle-blower confidential and ensure that the whistle-blower is protected from reprisals.⁵⁹ Since 1 January 2022, issuers have been required to state in their annual reports that they have such a whistle-blowing policy in place, and provide an explanation of how they have complied with certain key requirements, such as having independent oversight of the policy and commitment to protecting the identity of whistle-blowers.⁶⁰

Generally, all companies should have a proper whistle-blowing policy in place that provides an independent avenue for whistle-blowing and assurance that there will be no reprisal actions taken against genuine whistle-blowers. However, in respect of frivolous or false complaints, the policy should provide for the potential ramifications.

50 Section 36 of the PCA, which states that 'no witness shall be obliged or permitted to disclose the name or address of any informer, or state any matter which might lead to his discovery'.

Other than internal whistle-blowing, affected persons can also report directly to the relevant authorities. This is not uncommon, particularly for employment-related issues. While making a false report to the authorities is an offence, whistle-blowing done in good faith is unlikely to be regarded as a false report.⁶¹

III ENFORCEMENT

i Corporate liability

Criminal liability and civil penalties

Most offence-creating statutory provisions provide for criminal liability for a 'person' or 'party', which are defined in the Interpretation Act as including 'any company or association or body of persons, corporate or unincorporate'.⁶² Thus, companies in Singapore can commit offences and attract civil penalties. They can also be prosecuted as an accessory (e.g., abetment or conspiracy) to a primary offence.

Where market misconduct offences are concerned, companies can face both criminal liability and civil penalties. The SFA expressly details the circumstances under which liability may accrue to a company. Section 236B of the SFA sets out the criteria required for a corporation to be liable for the acts of an employee or officer.⁶³ Sections 226 and 227 of the SFA also set out the circumstances under which liability for the acts of an employee or partner relating to insider trading can be attributed to a company or partnership.⁶⁴ In addition, Section 236C of the SFA allows a civil penalty to be imposed on a company where failure to prevent or detect market misconduct by an employee or officer is attributable to the company's negligence.

Civil liability

A company can attract civil liability for the conduct of its employees and agents, based on the doctrines of vicarious liability and agency, or if the acts of its employees and agents can be attributed to it.

61 Public Prosecutor v. Mohd Ghalib s/o Sadruddin [2010] SGDC 316, in which a deterrent sentence of six months' imprisonment was imposed on an accused person who had provided false information in a complaint to the Corrupt Practices Investigation Bureau.

62 Section 2 of the Interpretation Act.

63 Namely that the offence must have been committed with the 'consent and connivance' of and 'for the benefit of the corporation'; Section 236B of the SFA.

64 For example, a company can be taken to possess any information that an officer of the company came into possession of in the course of the performance of their duties as that officer, and if that officer knows or ought reasonably to know of any matter or thing because of their position, it is presumed (until the contrary is proved) that the company knows or ought reasonably to know that matter or thing; see Section 226(1) of the SFA, and the possible defence available under Section 226(2) of the SFA.

Legal representation

A company and its employees may be represented by the same counsel, so long as their interests are aligned and the requirements on conflicts within the Legal Profession (Professional Conduct) Rules 2015 (PCR) are complied with. Where there is a risk of a conflict arising between the company and the individuals concerned, separate legal representation is recommended from the outset.

ii Penalties

Overview

Other than imprisonment, companies can be subject to most other forms of sanction, including fines, civil penalties or even disqualification from the right to carry out certain actions in the future.⁶⁵ Typically, financial penalties imposed on companies are higher than those imposed on individuals and some offence-creating provisions specifically provide for this.

DPA's

Under the DPA framework, companies can seek to avoid criminal prosecution in exchange for compliance with certain conditions.⁶⁶ DPAs are presently restricted to the offences in the new Sixth Schedule to the CPC.⁶⁷

To become effective, a DPA must be sanctioned by the High Court, which must decide that the DPA is in the interests of justice and that its terms are fair, reasonable and proportionate. Once the DPA has been completed and complied with, the Public Prosecutor can apply to the High Court to have a 'discharge amounting to an acquittal' granted in favour of the subject company.

Regulatory sanctions

Where the company or offence concerned falls under the purview of a specific regulator, additional sanctions may flow from the offence.⁶⁸

65 For example, where a company has engaged in discriminatory hiring practices, it may be barred by the Ministry of Manpower from applying for new immigration work passes for its employees for a specified period.

66 These conditions include: providing an admission of wrongdoing, paying a financial penalty disgorging profits, implementing programmes for corporate reform, and assisting in the investigation and prosecution of other wrongdoers. During the second reading of the Criminal Justice Reform Act 2018 (No. 19 of 2018) in Parliament, the then Senior Minister of State for Finance and Law Ms Indraneel Rajah noted that the financial penalties under the deferred prosecution agreement regime would not be subject to a statutory maximum.

67 Namely those relating to corruption, money laundering, dealing with stolen property or the proceeds of crime, and falsification of records.

68 Such sanctions may include the revocation of or conditions placed upon any required licence.

As alluded to above, SGX RegCo's powers of enforcement were recently expanded. From 1 August 2021, it has the powers to: (1) issue a public reprimand and require issuers to comply with specified conditions; (2) prohibit issuers from accessing the facilities of the market for a specified period or until any specified conditions are fulfilled; (3) prohibit issuers from appointing or reappointing a director or an executive officer for up to three years; and (4) require a director or an executive officer to resign. While SGX RegCo's powers under point (1) are non-appealable, its powers under points (2) to (4) are appealable before the Listing Appeals Committee.⁶⁹

iii Compliance programmes

Generally, the existence of a compliance programme does not itself amount to a legal defence to a criminal charge. It is nevertheless advisable for companies to implement such programmes, as they allow companies to uncover and address non-compliant aspects within the company. From a practical standpoint, it also allows the company to identify and address any potential loss-causing or liability risks.

In the event that the authorities decide to conduct a criminal investigation into a matter, the existence of a compliance programme (if properly enforced) may be used to persuade the authorities not to take criminal action against the company or individuals involved, or as a basis to enter into discussions for a DPA. If charges are brought against the company in relation to matters relating to the compliance programme, the fact that there is a compliance programme can also be relied upon in mitigation to seek a lower sentence.⁷⁰

iv Prosecution of individuals

Assessment of liability

When an employee faces or has been charged with a criminal offence, the company should first ascertain whether the offending acts were committed in the course of employment. If so, the company should ascertain whether there is a risk of legal liability to it as a result of these acts.

To this end, the company should consider whether an internal (confidential or privileged) investigation should be undertaken. The ramifications for the company could be both legal (resulting in civil or criminal claims) and reputational.

Action against employees concerned

Separately, the company should consider whether any action⁷¹ can or should be taken against the employee at any of the following stages: (1) while the employee is being investigated by the authorities and prior to any criminal charges being brought; (2) during the pendency of the company's internal review; (3) after the internal review is completed and findings have been reached; (4) after the employee is charged in court, but not yet convicted; and (5) after the employee is convicted or – as the case may be – acquitted of the charge in court. A 70 See, for example, [2.15] and [2.16] of the CCCS Guidelines on the Appropriate Amount of Penalty in Competition Cases 2016. The existence of a compliance programme is a mitigating factor that may be taken into account in the adjustment of a financial penalty.

71 For example, dismissal, suspension or other disciplinary actions.

number of factors will have to be considered before reaching a decision at each stage.⁷² It is not mandatory for a company to terminate or discipline the employee concerned for it to be considered as having cooperated with the state's investigations.

Coordination between counsel

If both the company and the employee have engaged legal counsel in the course of a government investigation, it is possible for coordination to take place between both sets of counsel. However, before doing so, it is important for the parties to consider whether any conflict of interest exists that would prevent them from doing so.

It is also important for parties to consider whether common interest privilege should be asserted over any ensuing communications. It is prudent for parties to document the extent of the common interest at the outset, and before sharing any privileged material.

Moreover, all such communications must be conducted with care, so as not to breach the provisions in the PCR on the interviewing of witnesses,⁷³ or the laws pertaining to interfering with or obstructing justice.

Payment of employees' legal fees

Companies may pay the legal fees of its employees. Indeed, many companies obtain directors' and officers' liability insurance policies, which serve to indemnify the company's directors or officers to the extent expressly provided within the policy.

IV INTERNATIONAL

i Extraterritorial jurisdiction

In Singapore, unless expressly provided for by legislation, laws do not have extraterritorial application. The following are notable exceptions to this general position.

TSOFA

Section 34 of the TSOFA states that every person who, outside Singapore, commits an act or omission that, if committed in Singapore, would amount to certain key offences under the TSOFA⁷⁴ is deemed to have committed those acts or omissions within Singapore and 72 These factors include the terms and content of the company's internal disciplinary policies, the employee's contract, the extent of any reputational impact, the seriousness of the alleged conduct, the likelihood of ongoing loss or damage to the company, the seniority of the employees concerned, the level of cooperation extended to the company by the employees concerned and the presumption that one is innocent until proven guilty.

73 See Rule 12 of the Legal Profession (Professional Conduct) Rules 2015 on communications and dealings with witnesses.

74 Section 3 of the TSOFA (prohibition against providing or collecting property for terrorist acts); Section 4 of the TSOFA (prohibition against provision of property and services for terrorist purposes); Section 5 of the TSOFA (prohibition against use or possession of property for terrorist purposes).

can be charged, tried and punished accordingly. Section 34 also provides that where certain offences⁷⁵ are committed outside Singapore by a Singapore citizen, that person may be dealt with as though the offence was committed in Singapore.

PCA

Section 37(1) of the PCA states that the PCA applies to Singapore citizens located outside Singapore.⁷⁶

CDSA

The CDSA deals with money laundering-related offences and the confiscation of benefits from drug dealing or criminal conduct and expressly defines 'criminal conduct' and 'drug dealing' to include the doing of such acts in Singapore 'or elsewhere'.⁷⁷ The scope of the CDSA extends to any 'foreign drug dealing offence', 'foreign serious offence' and any property 'whether . . . situated in Singapore or elsewhere'.⁷⁸

SFA

The market conduct provisions under Part 12 of the SFA apply to acts occurring outside Singapore in relation to, among other things, (1) securities or securities-based derivatives contracts of corporations formed or doing business in Singapore or business trusts whose trustees are formed or carry on business on behalf of the business trust in Singapore; (2) securities or securities-based derivatives contracts listed or traded in Singapore; and (3) financial benchmarks that are administered in Singapore.⁷⁹

ii International cooperation

Singapore has adopted various international conventions into its domestic law that facilitate the provision and obtaining of international assistance in criminal matters, including the provision and obtaining of evidence, the making of arrangements for parties to give evidence or assist in criminal investigations, forfeiture or confiscation of property, securing the custody of a person in transit and locating or identifying persons.⁸⁰

Singapore is also party to the ASEAN Treaty on Mutual Legal Assistance in Criminal Matters, which provides a process through which countries in the region can request and provide assistance in the collection of evidence for criminal investigations.

The investigating authorities in Singapore also work with foreign regulatory bodies to promote international cooperation. For example, the Singapore Police Force is a member 75 Section 6 of the TSOFA (prohibition against dealing with property of terrorists); Section 8 of the TSOFA (duty to disclose property or information).

76 The effect of this is that if a Singapore citizen commits an offence within the meaning of the PCA while outside Singapore, they can be dealt with as though their acts were committed within Singapore's boundaries.

77 Section 2(1) of the CDSA.

78 Section 2 of the CDSA.

79 Sections 196, 205 and 213 of the SFA.

80 The key domestic legislation in this regard include the CDSA, the TSOFA, the Extradition Act 1968 and the Extradition (Commonwealth Countries) Declaration, the United Nations Act 2001, and the Mutual Assistance in Criminal Matters Act 2000 (MACMA).

of Interpol. Similarly, MAS is a signatory to the IOSCO Multilateral Memorandum of Understanding Concerning Consultation and Cooperation and the Exchange of Information. Pursuant to the SFA, MAS can assist its overseas counterparts in foreign investigative actions.⁸¹

Extradition (both to and from) Singapore is possible, under the Extradition Act 1968 (EXA), which provides for the extradition of fugitives to and from foreign states with which Singapore has entered into an extradition treaty, and also a number of declared Commonwealth countries. Only individuals who have (or are alleged to have) committed offences within the definition of an 'extradition crime' under Section 2 of the EXA will qualify for extradition out of Singapore. The extradition processes provided for by the EXA are commonly used.

iii Local law considerations

In multi-jurisdictional investigations, a number of local law considerations are relevant, particularly where the disclosure or sharing of information is concerned.

Where a party is served an order to produce information under Section 22 of the Mutual Assistance in Criminal Matters Act 2000 and in good faith complies, that party is immune from civil or criminal action that would otherwise lie against him or her for breach of restrictions concerning the disclosure of information imposed.⁸² However, where the request for information emanates from another type of foreign request, considerations of confidentiality, banking secrecy and data protection arise.

The PDPA mandates that data that an organisation has collected, and that can be used to identify an individual, cannot be used or disclosed unless that individual gives or is deemed to have given consent.⁸³ While the PDPA allows for disclosure of personal data without consent where, among other situations, the disclosure is necessary in the public interest or for any investigation or proceeding or where disclosure is made to a 'prescribed law enforcement agency' upon production of written authorisation,⁸⁴ it does not specifically provide for disclosure without consent where the request for disclosure emanates from a foreign court or investigatory body.

The Banking Act prohibits banks licensed in Singapore from disclosing 'customer information',⁸⁵ except where provided for in the Act.⁸⁶ A breach of these provisions will result in criminal liability for the bank or any bank officer involved.⁸⁷ One exception where a bank may make disclosure of customer information without the customer's consent is where it is compelled to do so by law.⁸⁸

81 For example, under Section 172(1) of the SFA, MAS may, upon request, transmit information in its possession or order any party to furnish it with information. MAS may also order any person to furnish information directly to the foreign regulatory authority where there is an ongoing investigation or enforcement by the foreign authority; Section 172(1)(c) read with Section 172(2) of the SFA.

82 Section 24(1) of the MACMA.

83 Section 13 of the PDPA.

84 Which under the Schedule of the Personal Data Protection (Prescribed Law Enforcement Agencies) Notification 2014 and 2020 are currently limited to eight local enforcement agencies.

85 Which is defined as including any information relating to an account of a customer of the bank or any deposits of a customer of the bank; Section 40A of the Banking Act 1970 (BA).

86 Section 47 of the BA.

87 Section 47(6) of the BA.

88 See the Third Schedule Part 1 of the BA.

V YEAR IN REVIEW

i Significant legislation and consultation papers

Parliament passed the Financial Services and Markets Bill 2022 on 5 April 2022. The Bill was introduced after a public consultation in January 2022 and adopts a ‘financial sector-wide regulatory approach to complement MAS’ existing entity and activity based regulation’.⁸⁹ The first phase of the Financial Services and Markets Act 2022 (FSMA), including the general powers over FIs (inspection powers, offence and other miscellaneous provisions), anti-money laundering/countering the financing of terrorism framework (ported over from the Monetary Authority of Singapore Act 1970), commenced on 28 April 2023. The remaining phases of the FSMA are scheduled to be implemented during the second half of 2023 and 2024.⁹⁰ These include MAS’ harmonised and expanded powers to issue prohibition orders to bar persons who are not fit and proper from conducting certain activities or from holding key roles in FIs for a period of time and enhanced regulation of virtual asset service providers for money laundering and terrorist financing risks.

In May 2023, Parliament also passed the Computer Misuse (Amendment) Bill and Corruption, Drug Trafficking and Other Serious Crimes (Confiscation of Benefits) (Amendment) Bill, which introduce tougher laws against money mules who allow criminals to control their bank or other payment accounts. Among other things, the amendments introduce the offences of rash and negligent money laundering, which will allow a money laundering offence to be made out against an individual at a lower level of culpability than current laws which require the prosecution to prove that the money mule had knowledge or reasonable grounds to believe that the monies transacted through their bank account are linked to criminal activity. Under the proposed amendments, a person can be liable for rash money laundering if they proceeded to carry out a transaction while having some suspicions about the transaction, but did not make further enquiries to address those suspicions. In addition, a person can be liable for negligent money laundering if they continued with a transaction despite the presence of red flags or suspicious indicators, which would be noticeable by an ordinary, reasonable person.⁹¹

MAS also introduced the Financial Services and Markets (Amendment) Bill in March 2023 to establish and maintain a secure digital platform for financial institutions to share with one another, information on customers who exhibit multiple ‘red flags’ that may indicate potential financial crime concerns.⁹² This bill was also passed in May 2023.⁹³

ii Notable prosecutions and cases

In August 2022, the MAS, ACRA and CAD concluded their joint investigations into Noble Group Limited (NGL), which had commenced in November 2018. A civil penalty of S$12.6 million was imposed on NGL for publishing misleading information in its financial statements, in breach of the SFA. Stern warnings were issued to two former directors of Noble Resources International Pte Ltd (a wholly owned subsidiary of NGL) for failing to prepare and table annual financial statements in compliance with the prescribed accounting standards in Singapore, in breach of the Companies Act.⁹⁴

In November 2022, the former chief executive officer, chief financial officer and four independent directors of Hyflux Limited were formally charged in court for offences under the SFA for failing to disclose material information. Hyflux's former CEO also faced an additional charge under the Companies Act for failing to ensure that Hyflux made disclosures required under the accounting standards for its financial statements for the financial year ending 31 December 2017.⁹⁵ The joint investigation into potential lapses in Hyflux's disclosure obligations was formally commenced in June 2020.⁹⁶

In January 2023, the CPIB issued stern warnings to six ex-senior management staff of Keppel Offshore and Marine (KOM), for their alleged bribery of officials of Brazilian state-owned oil giant Petrobras that emerged in 2017. KOM also received a conditional warning in lieu of prosecution.⁹⁷ There was some controversy over this decision, which was debated in Parliament. A Minister in the Prime Minister's Office, Ms Indranee Rajah, explained that this was because the evidence in Singapore did not provide a sufficient evidential basis to prosecute, notwithstanding requests made to the Brazilian authorities. Several potentially key witnesses were not in Singapore, and the CPIB had not been able to secure their cooperation or agreement to testify in Singapore.⁹⁸

On 30 June 2022, MAS reprimanded the cryptocurrency hedge fund, Three Arrows Capital Pte Ltd (Three Arrows), for providing false information to MAS and exceeding the assets under management threshold allowed for a registered fund management company. It is also assessing if there were further breaches of MAS' regulations by Three Arrows.⁹⁹ Also in the cryptocurrency space, the Singapore police said in March 2023 that investigations had commenced concerning Terraform Labs,¹⁰⁰ co-founded by Do Kwon, who invented the TerraUSD stablecoin, which collapsed in May 2022 and wiped out some US$60 billion.

In November 2022, CCCS issued an infringement decision against four warehouse operators for price-fixing and imposed a total financial penalty of around S$2.8 million.¹⁰¹

VI CONCLUSIONS AND OUTLOOK

2022 saw the conclusion of several significant investigations. While the decision not to prosecute the individuals investigated in connection with the Petrobras corruption case caused some controversy, this case is arguably an isolated one, based on the particular evidential difficulties involved, and should not undermine Singapore's reputation of a zero-tolerance policy for corruption. The past 12 to 15 months also saw the introduction of various measures to enhance the regulatory framework and enforcement regime, including with respect to financial crime. In an interview with the Financial Times, the chief fintech officer at MAS also stated that it will be 'brutal and unrelentingly hard' on bad behaviour in the crypto industry.¹⁰² These evidence Singapore's continued efforts to maintain its position as a trusted financial centre.
